

My government-funded research program depends on net neutrality. If the demise of net neutrality results in prices going up (which is the likely case), either the government is going to have to give me more money to compensate or possibly I will be unable to do the work the government has paid me to do.

I am far from the only researcher in this position. If this goes through, the federal government needs to budget for it.